Teacher Action Research

45199 – 3 GRADUATE CREDITS PREREQUISITE 45196 ACT 48 P.E. HOURS: 90

This course is an independent study and is open only to students matriculated in the MA in Education Program at Gratz College with permission of the advisor.

Rapidly improving schools almost always cite data-driven instruction as the most important practices contributing to student success. Teacher action research is one such example of a data-driven approach that isolates change to a specific environment. During this course, educators will not only implement a teacher action research study but collect and analyze the data. This data analysis is important but only becomes meaningful for educators when combined with effective action leading to change in the classroom or school environment.
